COURSE OBJECTIVES

Climate change stands as one of the most intricate and formidable challenges our civilization has ever faced. However, the responses to it and its impacts are highly diverse, shaped by geographical locations and the world's population. This course is meticulously designed to provide you with a foundational grasp of the scientific underpinnings of climate change, offering a multidisciplinary exploration of this extensive field. You'll embark on a journey into the physical science governing our climate system, examining its various components and the fundamental mechanisms regulating responses to external influences. Beyond this, we'll delve into climate change through various lenses: delving into paleoclimatic shifts, scrutinizing recent historical variations, and probing into future climate projections. Additionally, we'll explore the social and economic dimensions intertwined with this critical issue.

Upon Completion of this Course, students will be able to:

1. Explain the fundamentals of climate change science;
2. Present the international climate change legal and policy framework and explain key issues under negotiation;
3. Assess the communication of science and policy for climate change;
4. Describe the expected consequences of climate change and the role of adaptation;
5. Evaluate the successes and failures of past national and international efforts to address climate change, and evaluate prospects for future management of climate change.
